

Selling home solar lights

Overview

How do I Sell my solar panels?

If your panels are leased or financed, you'll need to contact the solar provider early in the selling process. They'll guide you and the buyer through the transfer steps, which may include a credit check or new contract. Be sure to build in time for this during escrow to avoid closing delays.

Are solar panels included in a home sale?

If your solar panels are owned outright, the transfer is simple: they're included in the home sale like any other fixture. Just provide documentation like proof of ownership, warranties, and system specs to the buyer during the sale. If your panels are leased or financed, you'll need to contact the solar provider early in the selling process.

Will solar panels make or break a home sale?

The short answer: selling a house with solar panels can be a good investment for both the buyer and seller with the right strategy in place. But whether or not solar panels will make or break a home sale depends on a few key factors.

Should I remove solar panels if I Sell my House?

Technically, yes, but it's not recommended. Removing panels can damage the roof, void warranties, and cost thousands in labor. It's best to leave the system as part of the home sale and use the resale value boost to invest in solar in the next home. What happens to the solar tax credit if I sell my home?
